MyCAF Profile: Reflection

Your reflective statement:

In reviewing my Creative Attributes, I identified Storytelling, Connectivity, and Curiosity as the most relevant to my creative practice, future career, and personal interests.

Storytelling sits at the core of my work. Whether through illustrated picture books, wildlife conservation records, or travel-based visual archives, I use narrative as a way to connect my audience with the subject matter. I believe strong storytelling gives my projects a unique voice, making them more engaging and memorable. This skill also supports my long-term aim of working across both creative and ecological contexts, where complex ideas need to be communicated in accessible and emotionally resonant ways.

Connectivity is equally important, as my projects often involve collaboration with specialists, communities, and organisations from different fields. Building and sustaining these networks not only opens opportunities for creative exchange but also ensures my work has a wider reach and real-world impact. I value the ability to connect with people from varied backgrounds and disciplines, and I see this as essential for my future practice.

Curiosity is what drives me to explore new materials, research methods, and perspectives. It fuels my cross-disciplinary approach, allowing me to blend art, ecology, and storytelling in ways that feel fresh and authentic. My curiosity ensures that my work continues to evolve, and it helps me remain adaptable to emerging ideas or challenges within my field.

I ranked these attributes highest because they align directly with how I currently work and where I see my practice developing in the future. Skills such as Communication, Proactivity, and Enterprise are also important to me, but I view them as tools that support the three key attributes above rather than as primary drivers of my practice.

Where do I want to be?

Creative Attribute 1

I want to become more confident in expressing my ideas and communicating with people from different backgrounds. I'll practise this through professional networking, collaborative projects and organising activities for my student society.

Creative Attribute 2

I'd like to improve how I communicate personal experiences and complex ideas through visual storytelling. I'll experiment with different formats, including illustration, video and reflective writing, and share my work to gather feedback.

Creative Attribute 3

I want to build and maintain meaningful connections with people across different disciplines. Through my Nature × Art Society, workshops and professional networking, I'll create more opportunities for people to meet, exchange ideas and collaborate.
